I. Article: Thou Shalt Feel Good

Gary Craig – founder of EFT – uses the expression “the writing on our walls” to describe our beliefs. People in our lives – parents, teachers, clergy, friends, etc. – write their beliefs on our walls – the beliefs that had been written on their walls. While some of these may not make sense, and sometimes even cause us distress, they were shared with us with positive intentions – a belief that they are right and necessary for our well-being and survival in this world.

In any given situation, we consult these writings on our wall in order to know what to do – and how to judge people and situations. It is possible that the writing on your walls may cause you to resist/reject the ideas in this article, which is based on a number of ideas to which I’ve been exposed. And that’s okay. I’m not here to tell you what’s right – only to share what makes sense to me, with the hope that it might be of value to you.

So…. let’s talk about the Ten Commandments…

Now, while the specific code that I’m referring to – the laws on the tablet given by God to Moses – isn’t part of the tradition of all people from all cultures and religions, it seems that the basic principles are pretty universal in terms of what people shall or shall not do in terms of being an upstanding human being. So hopefully, even if you are not from a Judeo-Christian background, this article will still resonate.

Anyhow... the Ten Commandments...

For most folks, these are laid out as absolutely strict laws. “Thou shalt not” really means “THOU SHALT NOT!!!” It means that, like it or not, no matter how hard it might be for you to keep the Commandments, you must do so. One could say that we don’t even need to discuss the consequences of not following them, because not following them just isn’t an option.

Talk about pressure...!

For others, “thou shalt not” means something more along the lines of “thou should not” – like when someone is offered a piece of cake and says, “Well... I really shouldn’t...” – but does anyway.

Maybe it’s like what Captain Barbossa says in the first “Pirates of the Caribbean” movie:

“...the code is more what you'd call "guidelines" than actual rules.”

Failure to follow the code might lead to a mild case of guilt, but, heck, who can’t handle a bit of that? (How many of us simply expect to handle a bit of that anyway...?)

But what if there were another way to look at the Commandments? What if it were not a checklist of things you should or shouldn’t do in order to be a good person, but rather a checklist of things you will naturally do or avoid doing when you are in the healthiest state of mind...?
We have all kinds of gauges to help us keep things running smoothly. We have a fuel gauge in our car to let us know if we have enough gas. We have thermometers to know if things (rooms, food, kids...) are at an optimal temperature. We have air gauges to check the tires on our cars and bikes to make sure they run as efficiently as possible.

But there is a part of us that desires, far more than an optimal level of air in our tires, a feeling of connection to Source.

Yes – one of the ways we can tell that we are in harmony with the Universe is that we are feeling good. As I like to say, “Feeling Good is Feeling God.” But that can often feel like guess-timating.

So... what if we had a checklist to let us know that we are in sync with the Mind of our Creator?

So, “thou shalt” then read like this: When you have cultivated a relationship with God, and are allowing yourself to experience God-consciousness, you will naturally find yourself doing, or not doing, the following items...”

Consider it a mirror that we look in to see if we are put together before we head out into the world...

“Hmm... let’s see....
Hair combed...? Check!
Tie straight...? Check!
Dog hair brushed off jacket...? Check!
Loving God with all my heart, mind and soul..? Check!
Any desire to kill or covet...? Nope!
Allrighty, then - I’m good to go!”

If we find that our tie isn’t straight, that doesn’t mean we are a terrible person and that we need to beat ourselves up. It means there is some work to do. Same with the others.
So rather than it being a matter of forcing ourselves to painfully follow difficult rules in order to be a good person, we have been given some ways to know that we are in an optimal mindset to experience the best life possible.

Now, I’m certainly not saying that we shouldn’t keep the Commandments if we don’t feel like doing so – they make sense in terms of creating a world that works for everyone. But if it feels like we have to force ourselves to keep the Commandments, that’s a sign that we have some work to do. Does it make sense that God’s will for us is pain and deprivation? I can’t say for certain, but that doesn’t feel right to me. Anyhow, by all means, keep ‘em even if it doesn’t feel easy to do so, but also heal those parts of you that make ‘em seem hard.

You could even add others, such as:

(When you are in Harmony with the Mind of God...)

Thou shalt not judge thyself (or others) as being unworthy.
Thou shalt not experience lack.
Thou shalt not crave harmful substances.
Thou shalt treat thyself, in body, mind and spirit, with dignity and respect.
Thou shalt naturally love thy neighbor as thy self.

You can even make up some of your own. What are some checklist items you can give yourself to allow yourself to know that your head and heart are in the best place possible? Even your local laws (well... most of them...) work in this way. Think about it – if everyone was in sync with the positive energy of the Universe, we’d have no need of laws or police – we’d need no protection, because everyone would naturally treat each other with respect.

And what are the consequences if we fail to follow these commandments? Guilt? Imprisonment? Eternal damnation?...
Maybe none of those.

But... when we have that mindset where the Commandments are naturally kept, that’s the mindset where we know we are connected to All That Is. That’s when we feel REALLY good. That’s the vibration in which we manifest all that we desire with grace and ease. That’s when we are free from fear and pain. That feeling of connection, to me, is when we are experiencing the most joyful life possible.

If the real consequence is missing out on that, that is something I’m inclined to avoid. How ‘bout you?

(With thanks to Neal Donald Walsch and William P. Young, among others.)

IV. Tapping Transcription:

The Answers Are Tough Sometimes

(Side of the Hand) Even though the answers are tough sometimes
I choose to love and accept myself.
Even though the answers are tough sometimes,
I choose to love and forgive myself.
Even though the lessons are tough sometimes;
Sometimes when I’m trying to improve
I get faced with something
That really upsets me.
And maybe that’s a real favor;
Because it’s an opportunity
To clear something
That’s been holding me back, maybe all of my life.
And even though the lessons are hard sometimes,
I choose to deeply and completely
Love and forgive and accept myself
And everyone else
Who so willingly plays a part
In my freedom.

(Eyebrow Point) Sometimes the lessons are hard.
(Side of the Eye) If the outside world
(Under the Eye) Is a reflection of what’s going on inside
(Under the Nose) There are times
(Under the Mouth) Where I really hate to look in the mirror.
(Collar Bone) I say I want answers
(Under the Breast) But part of me is afraid to get the answers;
(Under the Arm) I may not like what I see;
(Top of the Head) It might cause me some pain;

(EB) But it’s also true
(SE) That if it’s a little painful now,
(UE) It’s reflecting
(UN) A subtle pain
(UM) That’s been holding me back for years.
(CB) If I make a lot of food
(UB) That requires eggs;
(UA) And I’m not really good at cracking eggs,
(TH) And I always get a tiny bit of shell in the food,

(EB) And it’s not really good for me,
(SE) But the shell pieces are so small I don’t see them.
(UE) So one day
A big piece of shell falls in there
And I think, “Oh no, there’s shell in there.”
But this is an opportunity
To see that I’ve been doing something
That isn’t for my highest good.
Even the harshest lesson

Can be an absolute blessing
If I recognize what I’ve been doing
And allow myself to make changes.
I recognize all these old fears
That have been holding me back,
And I clear them
Because fear is not my true nature.
I am pure light;
And I choose to know

That anything that shows me an opportunity
To clear out some old darkness,
To clear out those eggshells;
I choose to know that’s a blessing.
I can handle these lessons
Because I deserve the blessings;
And I’m having much more faith in myself
As I set myself free
In body, mind, and spirit.

And take a deep breath, and drink some water.
